

'Some people in LA are so skinny, they can't stand up without getting dizzy.'

overcome it.

Jared: Stuff like losing loved ones scares me. Like I'm afraid something will happen to my dogs. I have two of them - Harley Brown and Sadie Lane.

That's so sweet! Aside from walking the dogs, what do you do with your time off?

Jared: Try and stay in shape, plus we'll maybe hang out in a sports bar.

Jensen: Or we'll go to a scotch bar and get drunk. I can handle a lot of scotch. Not like in LA where they have two drinks and they're hammered - they're a lot different to Texan people.

Jared: That's 'cos they're all doing that stupid low-carb thing so they don't have any food in their system. But then there are people in LA who are so skinny, and not naturally so, that they can't even stand up without getting dizzy.

Is there any pressure on you in Hollywood to look good?

Jensen: It's part of the job. I'd be lying if I said looks weren't a major part of what we do. You can walk into a casting office and they decide just from your look if you're gonna be right for the role. But once you've established yourself as an actor you hope your talent speaks for itself.

Are you vain?

Jensen: No more than anyone else. I trust the hair and make-up people to do a good job and I'm not checking myself out in the mirror before every scene.

Jared: It's someone else's job to make sure we're looking good. How great is that!